The call for applications for admission to the IMT Ph.D. Program is now open.

The Doctoral program is divided into four tracks:

The Track in Computer, Decision, and Systems Science (CDSS) aims to equip researchers and professionals with a wide knowledge of the theoretical foundations of computer science, informatics and system analysis applicable to a large variety of real-life problems of industrial, managerial, economic, and societal interest. Such elements include control systems, management science, optimal decision making and numerical optimization, image analysis and pattern recognition. The objective of the program is to provide Ph.D. candidates with the necessary scientific competence to master the theoretical aspects of the discipline, to propose original research ideas, and to develop numerical algorithms, managerial solutions and software tools for applying the new concepts to practical applications. The Track in Computer, Decision, and Systems Science is organized into four main curricula:

- _Control Systems
- _Image Analysis
- _Management Science

The Track in Economics trains researchers, professionals and experts in political economy, applied public economics, industrial economics, with a focus on comparative institutional analysis, on the empirical analysis of real and financial markets, on macroeconomic policy. With its theoretical, quantitative and institutional approach, the program meets the increasing demand for highly qualified professionals, too analyze, plan, and manage concrete applications of political economy.

The program in Management and Development of Cultural Heritage aims at providing prospective professionals operating in the field of management of culture and cultural heritage with specific know-hows.

It also promotes research offering the students a lively contact with different research approaches and methodologies applied in the research fields related to cultural heritage and art history.

The Track in Political History aims to provide students with the most advanced and update-to-date theoretical and methodological instruments for the historical study of nineteenth and twentieth century politics, policies, political institutions and political ideas. The program aims in particular at bridging two divides: that between the theoretical approach of social scientists (political scientists and theorists, economists and anthropologists, global) and the idiographic approach of historians; and that between national and non-national (international, cross-national, transnational) political histories. By focusing on the theoretical competences necessary to understand political history, the core courses will aim especially at overcoming the first divide. By comparing national experiences, focusing on transnational phenomena and analyzing the interplay between national and supra-national arenas, the core seminars will especially aim at overcoming the second divide.

Short project description

We investigate intra-industry imitation in discretionary financial disclosure and management commentary. Imitation of discretionary reporting content and related reporting choices may be conceived as a rational response to discretion and related ambiguity in order to meet explicit and implicit industry norms. This issue is crucial in the current debate on a principles-based versus rules-based approach in the reporting standard-setting process. We will address the following research questions: (1) What is the extent of intra-industry benchmarking in specific discretionary reporting choices and which imitation mechanisms drive reporting conformity, (2) What is the impact of professional intermediaries (e.g. auditors, consultants) on imitation-driven reporting, (3) Which firm-specific factors (e.g. relative performance) affect the extent of benchmarked reporting, and (4) Whether and to what extent self-serving consequences (e.g. financial analyst behavior, cost of capital) of industry-based imitation in external reporting can be observed.

Open to: candidate which have completed and obtained a degree equivalent to at least 4 years of university studies

The call for applications for admission to the IMT Ph.D. Program is now open.

The Doctoral program is divided into four tracks:

The Track in Computer, Decision, and Systems Science (CDSS) aims to equip researchers and professionals with a wide knowledge of the theoretical foundations of computer science, informatics and system analysis applicable to a large variety of real-life problems of industrial, managerial, economic, and societal interest. Such elements include control systems, management science, optimal decision making and numerical optimization, image analysis and pattern recognition. The objective of the program is to provide Ph.D. candidates with the necessary scientific competence to master the theoretical aspects of the discipline, to propose original research ideas, and to develop numerical algorithms, managerial solutions and software tools for applying the new concepts to practical applications. The Track in Computer, Decision, and Systems Science is organized into four main curricula:

- _Image Analysis
- _Management Science

The Track in Economics trains researchers, professionals and experts in political economy, applied public economics, industrial economics, with a focus on comparative institutional analysis, on the empirical analysis of real and financial markets, on macroeconomic policy. With its theoretical, quantitative and institutional approach, the program meets the increasing demand for highly qualified professionals, too analyze, plan, and manage concrete applications of political economy.

The program in Management and Development of Cultural Heritage aims at providing prospective professionals operating in the field of management of culture and cultural heritage with specific know-hows.

It also promotes research offering the students a lively contact with different research approaches and methodologies applied in the research fields related to cultural heritage and art history.

The Track in Political History aims to provide students with the most advanced and update-to-date theoretical and methodological instruments for the historical study of nineteenth and twentieth century politics, policies, political institutions and political ideas. The program aims in particular at bridging two divides: that between the theoretical approach of social scientists (political scientists and theorists, economists and anthropologists, global) and the idiographic approach of historians; and that between national and non-national (international, cross-national, transnational) political histories. By focusing on the theoretical competences necessary to understand political history, the core courses will aim especially at overcoming the first divide. By comparing national experiences, focusing on transnational phenomena and analyzing the interplay between national and supra-national arenas, the core seminars will especially aim at overcoming the second divide.

Последний срок подачи заявок на участие в школе - 22 октября 2012.

17th CIMO WINTER SCHOOL «Plasticity: From brain functions to cancer and nanoscience»

11 - 16 March 2013, Finland

The Centre for International Mobility CIMO invites applications from Russian and Ukrainian postgraduate students for participation in the 17th Winter School organized during 11 - 16 March 2013 at Tvärminne zoological station of the University of Helsinki (<http://luoto.tvarminne.helsinki.fi>).

The goal of the Winter School is to enhance the mobility of young researchers and postgraduate students between Finland and the participating countries and to increase the cooperation between the universities. Before applying for participation in the 17th Winter School, the applicants are expected to contact one or more scientists/research group leaders at Finnish universities to discuss a possible project with them. Expression of interest by the Finnish host will be considered an advantage during the selection process.

Those Winter School participants who will be invited to Finland after the Winter School by Finnish research teams will be offered a scholarship from the CIMO Fellowship programme. The invited participants of the Winter School will be expected to come to work or study in Finland for 3 to 18 months. In 2012, the monthly amount of scholarship was 1200 euro.

The 17th CIMO Winter School is multidisciplinary - not for a particular, narrow field of science, but rather for a scientific topic. This time, the school focuses on plasticity in its many aspectsembracing topics from computer science, biochemistry, structural biology, nanoscience, cancer and cell biology, imaging, neuroscience and linguistics.

Applications from related fields, such as biochemistry, linguistics, molecular and cell biology, physiology, bioenergetics, imaging of cells, neuroscience, nanoscience, computer science, molecular medicine and medicine, etc. are welcome.

The school tends to stimulate active participation and discussion. The untraditional working method has been specially developed for the Winter School and it aims at enhancing the strength of participants' own personal expertise, problem-solving capabilities, scientific presentation skills and creative mind.

Tentative themes of the days:

- Plasticity in the nervous system
- Brain, language and cognition
- Cell biology and cancer
- Nanoscience: from calculations and computation to biology

More detailed information about the scientific programme as well as teachers will be published in September.

International Research Center IGK Fellowships, Germany

Federal Ministry

and Research

Open to: Candidates from the disciplines of History, Anthropology, Law, Sociology, Political Science, and Area Studies

this claim is simply based on a narrow definition of work as wage labour. Trans-cultural perspectives and definitions that go beyond purely instrumental descriptions of the concept of work confirm its high social, cultural and economic value as well as the large variety of categories with which it is possible to approach the subject.

Fellowship: 10 to 15 international fellows will receive a monthly stipend, which can be individually negotiated, and are obliged to work at the research center in Berlin.

The International Research Center “Work and Human Lifecycle in Global History” at Humboldt University in Berlin, funded by the Federal Ministry of Education and Research (BMBF) invites scholars to apply for 10 to 15 international research fellowships (senior scholars and postdoctoral candidates) for the 2013-2014 academic year.

The Center conducts research into work with a special focus on work as a concept and on its performativity. Although the end of the work society has occasionally been proclaimed in western industrial societies, it takes nothing more than a glimpse at these societies to realise that

Research at the IGK is based on a comparative, interdisciplinary perspective which is deployed as a means of studying the ways in which different societies throughout the world at different times have embodied the term ‘work’ with meaning; and how different concepts of work are linked to each other by the various ways in which the actual performance of work is expressed. The conceptual discourse on what can meaningfully meant by ‘work’ and the meanings which are embodied within the concept of work itself are central to research at the IGK. These aspects first need to be clarified before any robust statements with regards to history, social theory or interpretations of the present can be made. In addition, the IGK deploys a global and far-reaching chronological perspective to study the diversity of industrial and non-industrial, as well as capitalist and pre-capitalist realities.

Eligibility

Candidates especially from the disciplines of history, anthropology, law, sociology, political science, and area studies are welcomed to apply. Applicants should be at the postdoctoral level or senior scholars. The IKG centre would like the proposed projects to employ a historical and transregional perspective. Also, please do not only focus on work/labour, but also on life course. Possible topic areas are, among others, the household, loss of work, the relationship between work and non-work, as well as free and unfree labour. We welcome proposals about all regions of the world and especially those that look at comparisons, conflicts, relations between different regions. A global history perspective is not required; keeping an open mind to such ideas, however, is highly desirable. The fellowships will begin on 1 October 2013 and end on 31 July 2014. Shorter fellowship terms will be possible.

About the Fellowship

Fellows will receive a monthly stipend, which can be individually negotiated, and are obliged to work at the research center in Berlin. A fully equipped office will be provided as well as organizational help for visa, housing, etc. During the fellowship, candidates are also encouraged to introduce their work to wider audiences within Berlin's scientific community.

Application

Please use the electronic form on the official website (or access the link directly)

You will be asked to provide information regarding your biography, the research project you intend to work on during your fellowship as well as details on your current research. Post-docs should provide the names of two referees in addition to that.

Стипендії Міжнародного дослідницького центру IGK (Німеччина)

International Research Center IGK Fellowships, Germany

Open to: Candidates from the disciplines of History, Anthropology, Law, Sociology, Political Science, and Area Studies

descriptions of the concept of work confirm its high social, cultural and economic value as well as the large variety of categories with which it is possible to approach the subject.

Fellowship: 10 to 15 international fellows will receive a monthly stipend, which can be individually negotiated, and are obliged to work at the research center in Berlin.

The International Research Center “Work and Human Lifecycle in Global History” at Humboldt University in Berlin, funded by the Federal Ministry of Education and Research (BMBF) invites scholars to apply for 10 to 15 international research fellowships (senior scholars and postdoctoral candidates) for the 2013-2014 academic year.

The Center conducts research into work with a special focus on work as a concept and on its performativity. Although the end of the work society has occasionally been proclaimed in western industrial societies, it takes nothing more than a glimpse at these societies to realise that this claim is simply based on a narrow definition of work as wage labour. Trans-cultural perspectives and definitions that go beyond purely instrumental

Research at the IGK is based on a comparative, interdisciplinary perspective which is deployed as a means of studying the ways in which different societies throughout the world at different times have embodied the term ‘work’ with meaning; and how different concepts of work are linked to each other by the various ways in which the actual performance of work is expressed. The conceptual discourse on what can meaningfully meant by ‘work’ and the meanings which are embodied within the concept of work itself are central to research at the IGK. These aspects first need to be clarified before any robust statements with regards to history, social theory or interpretations of the present can be made. In addition, the IGK deploys a global and far-reaching chronological perspective to study the diversity of industrial and non-industrial, as well as capitalist and pre-capitalist realities.

Eligibility

Candidates especially from the disciplines of history, anthropology, law, sociology, political science, and area studies are welcomed to apply. Applicants should be at the postdoctoral level or senior scholars. The IKG centre would like the proposed projects to employ a historical and transregional perspective. Also, please do not only focus on work/labour, but also on life course. Possible topic areas are, among others, the household, loss of work, the relationship between work and non-work, as well as free and unfree labour. We welcome proposals about all regions of the world and especially those that look at comparisons, conflicts, relations between different regions. A global history perspective is not required; keeping an open mind to such ideas, however, is highly desirable. The fellowships will begin on 1 October 2013 and end on 31 July 2014. Shorter fellowship terms will be possible.

About the Fellowship

Fellows will receive a monthly stipend, which can be individually negotiated, and are obliged to work at the research center in Berlin. A fully equipped office will be provided as well as organizational help for visa, housing, etc. During the fellowship, candidates are also encouraged to introduce their work to wider audiences within Berlin's scientific community.

Application

Please use the electronic form on the official website (or access the link directly)

You will be asked to provide information regarding your biography, the research project you intend to work on during your fellowship as well as details on your current research. Post-docs should provide the names of two referees in addition to that.

for periods of minimum three months and maximum one year. The Fellowships are awarded regardless of discipline and existing employment positions.

Canon Fellows from Europe are free to choose their host institutes and hosts in Japan. The same freedom is given to Japanese Canon Fellows coming to Europe. Canon Foundation Research Fellowships may be applied for when an agreement on co-operation and on a research plan has been reached between the guest researcher and the proposed host institution.

It is strongly recommended that the candidates obtain the current issue of the application form from this website (download it here) or at the Secretariat of the Foundation, in Amstelveen - the Netherlands.

Application procedure for Fellowships end December of that year. Therefore, the earliest possible date to begin the Fellowship is January 1 of the following year.

Applications should be submitted in full (including the acceptance by the proposed host institute and the research plan) to the Secretariat of the Canon Foundation in Europe well in advance of the deadline.

It is important to note that no correspondence is entered into by the Foundation in regard to decisions taken on any individual application and in view of the large number of applicants, no negative inference should be drawn from the failure of a candidate to secure a Fellowship.

The financial support for Research Fellows ranges from 22,500 Euro to 27,500 Euro per year and pro-rata for different periods. The Canon Foundation gives priority to those who plan to travel to Europe or Japan rather than prolong a current stay.
